Christmas trees can be enjoyed long after they are thrown out by the family. They're a great source of vitamin C – for sheep. A farm in Maine is asking for Christmas trees for its sheep. The sheep love them, and they are a great source of vitamin C. It's sort of like humans eating oranges dipped in chocolate, something healthy which tastes good. So far they've collected 200 Christmas trees.

A man has been arrested after crashing his car into a police station. The suspected drink-driver is believed to have lost control of his car and ended up crashing it into the wall of the Frodsham police station in the middle of the night. The car was left resting nose-end against the station wall. Police were, of course, on the scene quickly to arrest the 49-year-old driver on suspicion of drink-driving. What a night!

The Greater Manchester Police have released recordings of inappropriate calls to the 999 emergency number. On one recording, a man complains that a hospital is refusing to refund money he has put into a coffee machine. So he wants the police to come and make the hospital give back the money. He is then heard swearing at the emergency call handler after being told to clear the line for genuine emergencies.

Last winter something strange was found floating on the River Dee in Scotland. They found ice circles the size of dinner plates. Yes, ice in a round form as big as your ordinary dinner plate. What happened is that water foam floating about on the water started to freeze – probably at night when it was colder. And because the water was circling in that spot they became round. Of course, they melted the next week when it got warmer.

A four-year-old boy has sent an adorable love letter to a little girl in his playschool class. The little boy's mother posted the letter on Reddit. In the letter, he invites his friend Baily to play at his house, telling her: "You should come to my house and eat cheeses with me, and I lost a tooth last night." Well, they do say food is the way to a woman's heart, but I'm not sure about this thing of eating cheese. What if little Baily doesn't like it? Ah, [sigh] love is so sweet!
